Looking forward to the new challenges, Ralph said: "It's an honour to be representing over 3,600 IOSH members in the Midlands to promote safer and healthier working.

"I'm similarly enthused about joining the team at Lorien, where I'll have the opportunity to develop further as a Chartered Safety, Health, Quality and Environmental Practitioner with such a forward-looking company that has demonstrated its positive safety culture with a record of achieving recognised independent safety awards for some years."

Lorien's compliance director Bill Treddenick added: "We are really pleased to recruit such an experienced and high-profile safety professional to our growing health and safety consultancy. Ralph has been an active member of IOSH for many years, and his appointment is fantastic news for both IOSH and Lorien."

Lorien has a staff of more than 70 specialists who design and deliver manufacturing projects in the brewing, drinks, food and pharmaceutical industries. Other areas of specialism are manufacturing performance improvement, sustainability and health & safety consultancy.

The company has just received the RoSPA Order Of Distinction for the third consecutive year, recognising its performance in occupational health and safety within construction.
